

SURVEY OF “GEORGE” FAMILY INTERMENTS IN NORTH

PEMBROKESHIRE, WALES, FROM 1654 TO 2012.

Compiled from gravestone inscriptions, parish registers, cemetery and cremation records and war memorials.

St Brynach's Church, Nevern

Blaenwaun Baptist Chapel, St Dogmaels

The author also provides commentaries on the George name, geographical distribution of families, variations of mortality over time, church history and non-conformism.

Fourth Edition, August 2015. (Survey includes the parishes of St Mary in Cardigan, and Steynton, plus extra Commentary)

Section 2: INTRODUCTION

“The past is a great darkness and filled with echoes. Voices may reach us from it, but what they say is imbued with the obscurity of the matrix out of which they come.”
Margaret Atwood’s “The Handmaid’s Tale”

The main purpose of this survey is to assist family members and historians in researching George family histories. It was compiled by first examining memorial inscriptions (MIs) in some 192 graveyards, covering ninety-four parishes across North Pembrokeshire, extending south to include Walwyns Castle, Freystrop, Slebech, Llanddewi Velfrey and Steynton. The survey also includes a parish in Cardigan Town which borders on Pembrokeshire. Then, secondly, by studying church, chapel and cemetery records held in public archives. Other, more recent records held locally by Church Rectors and Chapel Elders were not sought, owing to the sheer difficulty of the task. The final result, in Section 7, is a geographically comprehensive, if not exhaustive Directory of some 1,706 burials.

In Sections 3, 5, 6, 12, 14, and 15 the author has tried to present a historical, religious and social setting to the Directory. This may be especially helpful to on-line readers around the world who know little of the County’s history.

Section 3: THE GEORGE NAME

The personal (or Christian) forename George (of Greek origin) was probably brought to Britain by Crusader Knights and pilgrims returning from the Middle East during the 12th century. The knights, under King Edward III, also adopted the Eastern Orthodox Church’s image of Saint George to be their own warrior saint.

The forename George was not uncommon throughout Wales by the 15th century, especially in north Pembrokeshire, and became a popular personal name throughout Britain during the reign of the Hanoverian kings, from about 1720 onwards. The first known surname recorded in Britain is Hugo George of Norfolk in 1222, and a William George appears in the London Registers for 1412. The earliest example of the surname found by the author in Pembrokeshire burial records is in 1654 at Llawhaden.

In his book “Lloyd George Family History” published in 1999, H W Harrison quotes W D Phillips of the Pembroke County Guardian for 1924: “It has been said that two ancestors of William George of Tresinwen (a farm near Strumble Head) joined Henry Tudor’s forces before the battle of Bosworth in 1485. They were said to have fought as part of the Flemish forces at Bosworth, and in return were given grants of land in Pembrokeshire.” However it appears that this story has, as yet, no provenance to support it.

The author believes that the reason why historians have focussed upon the above William George is his illustrious great-grandson, the statesman David Lloyd George.

George is essentially a surname of South rather than North Wales. In the Return for Owners of Land in 1873, some 90% of George surnames were in South Wales. The 1841 census for Fishguard and the nineteen surrounding parishes, listed a total of 165 Georges. By the 1851 census the name formed 1.4% of surnames in north Pembrokeshire, the highest incidence of “George” in the Welsh counties. By the 2001 census this concentration of the surname had shifted to the Cardiff area, where there were some three thousand individuals.

Referring to the 2013 BT Phone Book for South West Wales, of the 191 “Georges” under “residential listings” and “farmers”, 95 lived in Pembrokeshire. With an assumed average of two adults per household and further households being ex-directory or reliant on mobile phones (i.e. not listed) then the total population of “Georges” in the county could be well in excess of 220, plus the children; with a similar number in the rest of South West Wales.

The Dyfed Family History Society website contains Richard Rose’s “Pembroke People” which lists all the people living in the Pembroke area between 1818 and 1837. Thirty one “Georges” are included, with spouses, occupations and addresses.

In “North of the Hills” E T Lewis lists seven “Georges” who were prominent members of North Pembrokeshire chapels.

Item 11 in the Bibliography mentions several George families who attained the status of, what might be termed “lesser gentry” in Pembrokeshire. These “prominent families” were: Mary George of Plâs y Bridell, Bridell Parish, in 1786; Reverend David George and Mary George of Brithdir Mawr, Newport, in 1873 and 1894 respectively; Eynon George and later George families of Cilast Ucha, Manordeifi Parish, from 1727 onwards; John George of Ffynnon Coronau, Bridell Parish, from 1786 to 1792; the George family of Foley House, Haverfordwest, from 1921 onwards; Thomas and Margaret George of Molleston, Narberth, in 1765; Thomas George of Great Nash, Llangwm, in 1811; William George* of Penysgwarn, Llanwnda from about 1786 to 1796; Thomas George and descendants Evan and Owen William of Plâs Crwn, Llanddewi Velfrey, from 1759 to the mid-nineteenth century; William Griffith George and John Picton Meredith George of Rhydgarnwen, Llantodd Parish, from 1873; George families of Welsh Hook, St Dogwell’s Parish, in the nineteenth century; Reverend David George of Trewern, Nevern in 1834 (he was later at Brithdir Mawr, above); David George and son of Denant, Steynton in the 1990s; Levi George of Esgair (or Esgyrn Fach), St Dogmaels in 1895; Mary Anne George (née John) of Llanrheithan, Llanrheithan Parish until her death in 1880; the George family of Mynydd Melyn, Llanychlwydog Parish sometime after 1787; John George and family of Tregroes, Fishguard from 1881 to 1901.

For the year 1718 John George of Trehaid in Nevern is mentioned in Item 12 of the Bibliography. The author also knows of Dorothy George of Trellewelyn, Manorowen who died there in 1878 aged 67.

From 1988 onwards Owen Lloyd George (grandson of statesman David Lloyd George) and son Robert lived at Ffynone, south-east of Capel Newydd.

The website www.georgefamilyname.org.uk has recently been launched. This society aims to establish a worldwide membership, collect family history information, publish newsletters and organise meetings of “Georges”.

*He was the great-grandfather of statesman David Lloyd George. From Penysgwarn, Pencaer, aged about 44 in the 1790s, he later moved to Tresinwen. (Information from land tax returns).

Section 4: LIMITATIONS OF THE SURVEY

There are several problems encountered in carrying out such a survey.

1. Not all burials were accompanied by memorial inscriptions. The following directory, in Section 7, includes several churches, such as St Dogmael's in Meline, where there are no "George" gravestones, but many "George" burials, according to the parish records. MIs were comparatively rare prior to 1800, owing perhaps to illiteracy, the smaller number of inhabitants, poverty, and the aversion of early religious dissenters to personal display.

Regarding literacy, E T Lewis reports that marriage records from Eglwyswrw, Eglwyswen and Llanfair Nant-Gwyn parishes indicated illiteracy rates between 1837 and 1842 to be around sixty percent. Of 351 prisoners in Haverfordwest gaol in 1870, 73 men and 40 women were completely illiterate.

As to population, estimates give 20,000 for the mid sixteenth century and 32,000 for 1670. Census records show that it slowly rose in the county from 56,000 in 1801 to 99,000 in 1971 and to 122,000 in 2011. Despite this rise in the county population, some parishes suffered a fall in numbers, as shown in the following table 1, derived by E T Lewis from census records. All but one declined over 120 years.

Table 1: Population versus Time for Five Parishes in North Pembrokeshire

Year	Eglwyswrw	Eglwyswen	Llanfair-Nant-Gwyn	Meline	Nevern
1841	560	395	241	492	1625
1901	393	244	165	297	982
1961	338	196	310	223	617

Poverty is illustrated by several examples. In early years it was common practice to use a coffin solely to transport the shrouded corpse to the grave, after which it was returned to the church for further interments. E T Lewis quotes George Owen, circa 1600 that in the twenty-seven parishes of Cemais there were only five wheeled-carts, the more common method of moving loads being a pony-drawn sled. Lime was frequently transported in panniers on horses' backs. In the early nineteenth century some people still went about barefooted.

On pages 182 and 183 of his book, E T Lewis presents a vivid account, based on Meline vestry books*, of how the poor were helped. He also mentions the poor-house (Ty Llwm) at Crosswell where a destitute family could find shelter. (A similar house existed close-by Fron Uchaf in Dinas up to about 1920)

* Meline and Mynachlogddu vestry books are amongst just a few to survive in North Pembrokeshire.

2. It is impossible to read every MI on gravestones because of erosion, lichen encrustation, encroaching foliage and damaged or toppled stones. Also, certain sandstone and slate headstones become delaminated, due to interstitial ice, and inscriptions are lost. Some graveyards present real hazards to researchers, in terms of steep uneven ground, hidden holes, slippery kerbs, low (sometimes spear-tipped) rails, and glass flower domes. However, the growing practice of uprooting and re-arranging gravestones in straight lines, back-to-back, or around the graveyard perimeter, eases mowing and the collection of inscriptions. Tegryn Chapel is a prime example of this re-arrangement, and in addition most of the old gravestones there have been cleaned, to enhance the MIs. Unfortunately those memorials which comprise just an inscribed stone frame around the grave, or a low coffin-shaped stone with no headstone, may be lost in this process.

3. Many chapels have only fragmentary, or possibly no written records. Most existing registers appear to be lodged in the homes of elders or in the chapel buildings. Some records are kept by a “mother” or “sister” chapel: for instance, Beulah Baptist Chapel at Colston keeps the records of Smyrna Chapel at Puncheston. A few records are held in public archives, but many of these, on microfilm, are difficult to decipher.

4. Parish registers of baptisms, marriages and burials became compulsory in 1538, but this only applied to the Established Anglican Church (Catholics, Jews and others were not included). Few registers now exist from before 1600. The 17th Century records of many parish churches are incomplete, damaged or missing, and the names of people and places often suffered haphazard spelling. Church records earlier than 1813 (when standard registers were adopted) are often difficult to decipher, with baptisms, marriages and burials chronologically interspersed. (At Llangan parish, bordering Pembrokeshire, land tax payments from 1767-1845 are also included) A further complication is that the handwriting of clerics is often illegible. A notable exception is Nevern where the records for the 17th century are immaculate.

In 1598 it was decreed that copies or transcripts of parish registers were to be sent annually to the diocesan registry. Now known as bishops’ transcripts, they are often better preserved than the original church registers.

5. Prior to 1733 church records may be found written in Medieval Latin, as in Cilgerran and Dinas parishes. For example two burial records from Cilgerran read “Sidneius filius Jacobi George sepult 3 May 1729” and “Maria uxor Davidi George sepult 5 July 1710”. These translate to “Sidney, son of Jacob George was buried 3 May 1729” and “Mary wife of David George was buried 5 July 1710”. A scribbled record from Dinas appears to read “Gulielmus George sepultas fuit die Mercurii rig: decio quinto die Octobris tantum in lana et jur coram Jacobo Lloyd Armigero vicesimus primo die Octobris 1679”. This roughly translates to “William George was buried with a woollen shroud this Wednesday, the 15th day of October, witnessed and sworn before James Lloyd, curate this 21st day of October 1679” The curate seems to have been a member of the gentry, with a coat of arms (Armigero). From 1666, to protect the wool industry, there was a legal requirement that the dead were to be buried in a woollen shroud, unless they were paupers or victims of the plague, though by about 1770 this law was largely ignored.

6. Whilst records of County Council cemeteries are available and complete, but not always up to date, those of other cemeteries have not been discovered, but may be “hidden” in parish and chapel records.

7. Whereas a MI may list several interments and provide additional details of family relationships, occupations and residences, an official written record is usually restricted to naming a single individual, with date of burial, and sometimes age. Generally, the earliest records contain the least information.

Section 5: WELSH SURNAMES

Wales has a history of patronymic naming whereby the father's first name became the last name of his children. So the "surname" changed with every generation and was a means of conveying male lineage. This applied to the ancient Welsh names like Morgan and Rhys, and to more recently settled names like William and Evan. All derived from the first name of the father, and slowly mutated to become fixed surnames, often with the addition of the letter "s", like Williams and Evans. A variant used Ab or Ap to denote "son of". Hence such surnames as Bowen, and Prichard evolved from Owen and Richard.

This tradition was widespread before the Acts of Union in 1536 and 1543, when English became the official language of the courts in Wales, and estates were passed intact to the eldest son. This ended the tradition of gavelkind whereby patrimony was divided between sons. From this period, large landowners (the gentry) developed fixed surnames, and children assumed the surnames of their fathers. Over time poorer folk also began to conform to this fashion, especially in the towns. However the patronymic system continued in some rural Welsh-speaking areas in the north and west, up to the early nineteenth century. Most Welsh surnames actually derive from this practice.

The patronymic tradition means that the original traceable ancestors of present-day "Georges" sprang from families where the surname was, at some time and place, made secure and permanent. Hence "Georges" nowadays (like other families) are not all related to each other, but are members of groups, each one originating from its secured surname.

By the 13th Century most ecclesiastical parishes were established. Civil registration of births, marriages and deaths (BMD) started on 1st July 1837 and finally curtailed the use of patronyms. It ordered that all marriages be registered at a district office, and that the first name, surname, occupation, age and address of both parties be recorded. However prior to 1874 BMD records were incomplete and possibly up to a quarter of the population is missing from these early records. From 1874 registration was made compulsory, with penalties for failure.

Although the George surname is a relatively recent import to Wales it may still have been influenced by the patronymic custom in some areas. Hence, prior to 1836 a small proportion of recorded George surnames may not derive from the father's surname. Where early records and inscriptions include the name of a property (e.g. a farm) this usually indicates a land-owning family where surnames were secure. In other cases, prior to 1836, the father's surname may have to be established, via christening, baptism and marriage records, to confirm a child's surname. Owing to this uncertainty, in the directory which follows, the author cannot guarantee every surname.

Section 6: NON-CONFORMITY IN WALES

In their 2009 publication "Discovering Chapels in St Davids" the Chapels Heritage Society wrote the following. "The Reformation in Europe gave rise to a persistent demand for more freedom in worship and in Wales the dissenters gathered secretly from about 1600 to hear the Word of God preached in their own language and without the restrictions of the church ritual. When William Wroth founded the first independent church in Llanfaches, Monmouthshire in 1639, it ignited a spark which ran over the mountains 'like fire in the thatch', in spite of severe persecution from the church authorities. The name 'non-conformist' was given to those church ministers who refused to conform to the Anglican Liturgy as required by the Act of Uniformity, 1662, and they were evicted from the church. Persecution of these Nonconformists (or dissenters as they were also called) and the congregations who followed them continued until the Toleration Act, 1689 under William of Orange. From that time on chapels began to spring up all over Wales, the many differences of opinion over doctrine and practice giving rise to a great variety of denominations. Probably upward of 6000 chapels were ultimately built in Wales, becoming in many small towns and villages the heart and soul of the community they served and representing a national spirit of independence. Today, from having been the essence of much of the cultural, political, educational and religious life of Wales for over 300 years, the chapels are in decline, and many stand neglected and forlorn, while others have already been demolished. Their historical importance in preserving the Welsh language and national culture is probably immeasurable.”*

A pioneer of non-conformism in Pembrokeshire in the late 17th century was Peregrine Phillips, who languished in Haverfordwest gaol on numerous occasions.

Section 7: DIRECTORY OF GRAVES

The following directory presents 142 graveyards and their graves in the order in which they were visited by the author. Many MIs are in Welsh, and these have been translated into English and made more concise. MIs sometimes found within church buildings and crypts were not collected, as most churches are kept locked nowadays. Chapels and churches lacking graveyards are not mentioned in this document, the assumption being that their members were interred at unknown graveyards.

There are a few other surnames appearing alongside “Georges” on some gravestones, and these presumably belong to close relatives. Within each listed burial ground, the gravestones are numbered 1, 2, 3 etcetera. Additional information from parish and chapel records and from websites follows the gravestone inscriptions, resulting in a total of some 1,706 burials being listed in the directory. Many early parish records omitted the age of the deceased. (DFHS is gradually producing microfilmed surveys of graveyard MIs).

Founding dates for chapels have been included, though it should be remembered that early dissenters, risking persecution, first gathered in private dwellings and barns and also out of doors. Occasionally such services were disrupted as press gangs abducted men for The Royal Navy. When it came to building the first chapels, sites in small towns were generally avoided, the open countryside presenting fewer dangers to freedom of worship. (Interestingly, during the 19th Century it was customary to hold chapel services in farmhouses, as in Mynachlogddu, in order to include and convert more isolated families.

In Section 13, there is a list of graveyards for which no evidence was found to indicate that they contain “George” burials. Section 20 provides an index to this directory.

1. Ramah CM Chapel 1769 (ipo), Brynhenllan, Dinas:

1. Maria, wife of Francis George, and daughter of the late David and Elizabeth Williams of Garnwen, d1886 aged 32.

2. CM Cemetery, Haverfordwest Road, Fishguard, opened in 1901: Berachar CM Chapel is in Goodwick:

Section 12: COMMENTARY ON THE MAIN DIRECTORY

1. Of the 95 parishes forming the survey area, only eight appear devoid of "George" interments. These are St Elvis (Llaneilfwy) the smallest parish in the county, Cilrhedyn

West, Llandeilo Llwydarth, Haroldston West, Johnston, Llanhowel, Llanychaer, and Walton East. The first three deserve some explanation.

With St Teilo's Church in St Elvis Parish lacking a graveyard and becoming derelict by 1900, burials were made in the adjoining parish of Whitchurch. (Ancient interments were revealed when laying the foundations of adjoining farm buildings at St Teilo's) Cilrhedyn West Parish Church of St Teilo and St Llawddog, north of Cilrhedyn hamlet in the east of the County was closed in 1981. Parishioners were then interred in the neighbouring parish of Clydey. The NLW holds Bishops Transcripts of early church records from Cilrhedyn. (MI surveys were made at the churchyard in 1981 and 2002 and are held by PA, references D-WI-10 and HDX-1605).

Llandeilo Llwydarth Parish Church, St Teilo's near Maenclochog, was roofless by 1898, and from 1814 the nearby parish of Llangolman had assumed responsibility for burials.

2. Twenty-seven mariners are mentioned in the directory. They are: 2.2 Henry George; 5.1 William George; 5.4 John George; 13.1 Benjamin William George; 27.3 Thomas George; 27.4 John George; 39.1 David George; 39.7 Titus George; 40.1 Stephen George; 41.2 Daniel George; 41.3 William George; 43.16 William George; 43.17 Thomas George; 49.2 William George, John George and William George; 49.3 George George; 49.10 Josiah George; 49.11 David George; 49.12 Griffith George, George George and Griffith Owen George; 57.1 Thomas George; 65.2 Arnold George; 67.6 John George; 83.2 David Emrys George and 140.1 Stephen George. Doubtless there are other mariners "hidden" in the directory.

The website www.welshmariners.org.uk lists sixty-one mariners with the George surname, who were born in Pembrokeshire between 1751 and 1899.

3. Master mariner Arnold George and his wife (para 65.2) revealed a nautical sense of humour when naming their twin daughters, Mary Elizabeth Fareast George and Helen Farwest George, born in 1866.

4. The author found no Catholic graveyards but noticed that Catholic nuns had been interred in Llanwnda cemetery.

5. The records for Llandissilio parish uniquely include burials at other graveyards (Puncheston, Little Newcastle, Morfil, Llanycefn and Llanstinan). Presumably the deceased persons originated from these parishes.

6. Throughout this directory the high mortality rates arising from childbirth and children's diseases are woefully evident. See the examples for Rhydwylym in para 17, for Prendergast in para 82, and for Ambleston in para 104. See also Section 15.

7. Whilst in latter years, in the Welsh-speaking areas, the great majority of Georges were interred in nonconformist graveyards, in earlier times they (and everyone else) were taken into churchyards. (Non-conformists frequently insisted on their right to a church burial) Notable examples of this are at Bridell, where 98 burials were made in St David's churchyard between 1780 and 1971, and in Nevern parish, where 63 "George" burials occurred in St Brynach's and St Mary's graveyards between 1670 and 1911.

8. The following burial grounds contain more than seven “George” gravestones.

Para 66 Bridell Church has 31.

Para 39 Tabor Baptist Chapel, Dinas has 24.

Para 42 Harmony Baptist Chapel, Pencaer has 23.

Para 84 Cilfowyr Baptist Chapel, Cilgerran has 23.

Para 41 Hermon Baptist Cemetery, Fishguard has 18.

Para 49 Blaenwaun Baptist Chapel, St Dogmaels has 17.

Para 34 Lebanon Baptist Chapel, Camrose has 14.

Para 62 Siloh Independent Chapel, Tufton has 11.

Para 20 Letterston Cemetery has 10.

Para 50 Penybryn Baptist Chapel has 8.

9. The Religious Census for 1851 shows St David’s Cathedral as the sole parish church. It is perhaps not surprising then that, in such a large parish the census also reveals some ten non-conformist chapels ministering to the laity within and just outside St David’s parish.

10. In the course of the survey the author was struck by the rich diversity of graveyard memorials and the skills of their masons, some of whom, like John Harries of Fishguard in the mid 19th century, signed their work. Memorials clearly reflected the status of families, and changes in fashion and materials*. Materials varied, through slate, limestone, sandstone, granite and marble. In the late 19th century, lettering was formed from lead-tin alloy strip, fixed into the stone.

Both Nevern and Blaenwaun graveyards, shown on the frontispiece, exhibit a wide variety of memorial designs. The author also enjoyed the rich displays of spring flowers, now largely restricted to graveyards such as Harmony Chapel, and Llanhowel and Wiston Churches. Many of the older, less-used graveyards have also become wildlife sanctuaries.

*An exception to this is found in Quaker burial grounds where the memorials are similar in respect to materials, size, form and wording. This was to guard against any distinction being made between the rich and the poor.

11. Several abandoned and derelict chapels and churches were encountered during the survey, together with conversions to dwellings and businesses, indicating the social changes of the past century. When writing about Nevern, circa 1600, George Owen observed that there were no fewer than eight chapels in the parish, and most were in ruins. They were St Thomas, St Ffrede, Gwenfron, Wenddith, Reall, Padric, Kilgwin and St George. In 1811 Richard Fenton also noted abandoned chapels, in the parish of Clydey.

Since the eleventh century, when people believed the world to be divinely ordered, religious institutions in the Principality have been profoundly affected, and sometimes ravaged, by many forces and events. These included:

- a) William the Conqueror travelling to St David’s in 1081 to parley with ruler Rhys ap Tewdur, followed by the Norman invasion of the County in 1093. Thereafter, the Welsh Bishop of St Davids was replaced by a Norman, and all bishops had to obey the Archbishop of Canterbury. The Norman custom of re-dedicating churches to Roman saints caused many Celtic saints to fade into obscurity.
- b) The decades of warfare, with the enforced Anglicisation of South Pembrokeshire and the violent settlement of English and Flemish farmers in 1117, with a line of castles built from Roch to Laugharne to defend the frontier against the native Welsh.

- c) Pope Innocent's interdict against King John in 1208. This banned most church services for some six years, with John confiscating church property and many bishops fleeing to the continent.
- d) The steady acquisition by monasteries of vast estates from the 12th Century, with for instance, St Dogmaels owning Mynachlogddu.
- e) The late 13th century conflict with King Edward 1st who divided Wales into counties. In 1291 he started taxing the Church to help fund his crusade.
- f) The Black Death and famine of the 14th century, with the decline in the influence of the Church, followed by the Peasants Revolt and the ending of serfdom.
- g) The success of Henry Tudor at the Battle of Bosworth in 1485, which ended the Wars of the Roses and brought relative peace to Wales.
- h) Myles Coverdale's publication in 1535 of the first complete modern English Bible translation. (Based partly on Tyndale's earlier work and printed in Antwerp) This book permitted the populace to start questioning Church dogma.
- i) The Tudor Reformation, with consequent appropriation and sale of monastic lands and the discouragement of chantries, shrines and pilgrimage. Hence St Davids, St Dogmaels and Slebech became impoverished. This rejection of Papal power marked the decline in the awesome power of the medieval Catholic Church. After the Reformation half of the parish clergy were appointed by the Crown and others by lay landowners.
- j) The growth of non-conformism. (By 1862 non-conformists in Wales formed nearly three-quarters of the adult population)
- k) The 17th century Civil War, and Stuart Restoration of 1660, when nonconformists (especially Quakers) were violently persecuted.
- l) Puritan iconoclasm in the 1640s, under Cromwell, when removal or destruction of church icons, crosses, reliquaries, images, stained glass, statues, inscriptions, vestments etcetera was authorised. John Calvin had argued that these items were contrary to the biblical commandment concerning graven images and idolatry. From 1648 many priests were removed from their livings for not taking the Covenant (to defend Protestantism against its papist enemies).
- m) The discoveries of the early natural philosophers such as Roger Bacon, in mathematics, alchemy and optics, and later Isaac Newton who established the motion of the planets and the nature of light. These were English roots of the 18th Century Enlightenment which had slowly grown from ancient Greek and Muslim ideas and from the European universities which taught science and threatened the monastic monopoly in learning. This led to discoveries in astronomy, concerning the real nature of the universe, which conflicted with Church teaching.
- n) The publication of the Welsh Bible and prayer books in the 1630s. These helped to preserve the Welsh language.
- o) The lengthy Napoleonic Wars, with the fear of invasion, and the subsequent economic depression. During the war parish vestries were required to select men to join the militia.
- p) Field enclosures, agricultural depressions and mechanization of farming, with consequent migration to the industries of South Wales and elsewhere. During the 19th century over ninety thousand people emigrated from Wales to the USA.
- q) The dissatisfaction of the laity with the service provided by many church incumbents in the 19th century, some of whom resided in England.
- r) The publication of "On the Origin of Species" by Charles Darwin in 1859, and the widespread discovery of fossils in ancient strata. These developments helped establish the concept that humans were part of the primate family, and challenged the Jewish creation myth in Genesis.

- s) The growth of the Welsh press from the 1820s which informed and influenced peoples' political and religious views.
- t) The creation of secular parish councils in 1894, which assumed the role of the failing vestries.
- u) Two World Wars, which created disillusionment in Church teaching amongst the populace.
- v) The non-conformist tithe disputes and disestablishment of the Church in Wales in 1920 (partly enacted by David Lloyd George). Tithes were abolished in 1936.
- w) The modern growth of individualism, secularism and consumerism.

Adaptation or closure of religious houses has been the result of these and other events. However the moral core of Christianity had survived. In North Pembrokeshire close-knit rural communities still view their chapels as vital to their spiritual and social life, whilst some churches are benefiting from the attendance of English newcomers.

12. The earliest church burial registered here was in the parish records for Llawhaden in 1654, whereas the earliest chapel burial of a "George" was found on a gravestone in Blaenwaun, St Dogmaels for 1809. (A 1795 engraving of Blaenwaun Chapel shows even older gravestones)

13. A major obstacle to this project has been the dearth of non-conformist chapel and cemetery records deposited in public archives. Out of 88 graveyard sites studied only 16 had deposited records, and many of these lacked burial registers (see Sections 13 and 20). Of all the chapels in Haverfordwest and Cardigan, not one appears to have deposited burial records in a public archive.

Descendants of the Welsh "diaspora" from the Antipodes, Southern Africa, Canada, the USA, Patagonia, England and elsewhere, who are seeking their non-conformist family roots, visit these centres and are often disappointed by the lack of information on chapel christenings, baptisms, marriages and burials. The Pembrokeshire Archives and National Library of Wales, together with Ceredigion and Carmarthenshire Archives, welcome donations or loans of chapel record-books, whatever their condition. These are then preserved and copied so that the wider public can more easily discover their Welsh forbears. The Chapels Heritage Society recommends that chapels deposit their records with public archives.

14. Prior to the early 19th century, the age at death was rarely noted in parish records. This may appear strange to people now. From the early 16th century, baptisms were normally registered by the Church, so age could often be determined if necessary. In 1837 registration of births became a legal requirement and by 1853 this Act was being strongly enforced. It is likely that, in earlier times, many poor and illiterate folk could not actually state their age with any accuracy.

15. When searching the Nevern parish records, the author noticed an exceptional number of burials during 1679-1680. For these and adjacent years the number of burials were as follows: 1676 (10), 1677 (4), 1678 (7), 1679 (29), 1680 (14), 1681 (11), 1682 (11). Of the 29 burials in 1679, 15 were male and 14 female. Seven bore the John surname. All but two deaths occurred in the five warmest months from May to September. The cause of this peak in the number of burials is not known, but could be cholera.

16. For many coastal graveyards such as Nolton and Walton West, parish records reveal “unknown” victims of shipwrecks whose bodies were found on Pembrokeshire’s beaches. Not all MIs mark actual graves: for persons lost at sea or in conflicts abroad, memorial stones were often placed in their local graveyards.

17. The author could not help wondering how a 45 year old “coloured seaman” from Virginia ended up in the St Dogmaels Workhouse in 1887 (Directory para 27.27). Also, what was the origin of his surname? (The Slebech Estate Papers for 1832, held at PA, lists 389 slaves working on three Jamaican plantations owned by the Phillips family. They shared a variety of English, Welsh and Scottish surnames, presumably originating from the many slave overseers and owners. The Phillips family would be handsomely compensated by the British government following abolition in 1834). Edward was born in 1842, before slavery was outlawed in the USA in 1865. He is not mentioned in the 1881 census for the Workhouse.

18. Directory para 91.9 for St Thomas á Becket Church records the little-known first wife of William George, the father of statesman David Lloyd George. Selina Huntley was born in London and married William George there at the parish church of St George, Hanover Square in central London on 11 April 1855. Sadly she died from pulmonary tuberculosis only eight months later in Haverfordwest.

19. The Directory highlights the paternal relatives of the statesman David Lloyd George, at Jordanston Church (para 7), Brynhyfryd Cemetery in Newport (para 11.1), Hermon Chapel in Fishguard (para 41), Harmony Chapel in Pencaer (para 42), St Nicholas Church (para 114) and Smyrna Chapel in Puncteston (para 126). Lloyd George’s maternal relatives, the Lloyds, were Caernarfonshire folk.

David Lloyd George (himself a Baptist) died at 82 on 26 March 1945 and was buried by the River Dwyfor at Llanystumdwy near Criccieth in Caernarfonshire.

20. The nine most common personal names in the George directory are as follows. For girls they are, in order of popularity, Mary, Anne, Elizabeth, Margaret, Martha, Sarah, Hannah, Jane and Elinor. For boys they are John, William, Thomas, David, James, Benjamin, Henry, Evan and Stephen. After 1913, six males in the directory have the second name Lloyd, clearly in tribute to David Lloyd George who became an MP in April 1890 and was Chancellor of the Exchequer in 1913.

21. The directory reveals that the following non-conformist chapels and churches hold George burials: 27 Baptist, 13 Independent, 6 Calvinistic Methodist, and 2 United Reformed.

22. Stone monuments from the first millennium AD have somehow found sanctuary in 27 of the surveyed graveyards. (For example at Bridell and Cilgerran churchyards). These are usually inscribed with Ogham or Latin script and sometimes with crosses, and remind us of the early Irish settlers and Celtic Christians of Pembrokeshire. Some reveal the names of prominent men, such as Vendogni at Brawdy, Dovagni at Jordanston, Vitaliani and Maglicunas at Nevern, and Gendili at Steynton.

Details of these monuments are provided in the Royal Commission book shown at item 10 in the Bibliography.

23. The “Carmarthenshire and Pembrokeshire (Clynderwen, Cilymaenllwyd and Henllan Fallteg) order 2002” came into effect in April 2003. This boundary change caused twenty-two square kilometres of land, including the settlement of Clynderwen, to be transferred from Carmarthenshire to Pembrokeshire. Parishes wholly or partly transferred were Egremont, Castell Dwyran, Llandissilio East, Llanfallteg and Cilymaenllwyd, all lying in the Hundred of Derllys.

24. The author came across a seemingly unique gravestone in St Mary’s churchyard near Trecwn. Ten yards from the north wall of the church there is a stone inscribed on one face in Welsh and on the opposite face the English translation. The latter reads: sacred to the memory of David Higgon who died at Carndivo-Vach in this parish May 6th 1855, aged 76 years. As a record of his faithful services to the Trecwn Family for more than 50 years; this stone was erected by his last master, Revd Charles Henry Barham.
The Barham family were the local gentry who built the impressive stone school at Trecwn.

25. The earliest MI found on a gravestone was in Bridell Parish churchyard, for David George d1780 aged 3 years. (Directory para 66.19 with 2015 photo.)

26. In 1682 there were four Quaker graveyards in the County:

- a. at Martel, west of Puncteston. (This has completely disappeared)
- b. north-east of Sutton in Lambston Parish, west of Haverfordwest at OS ref SM917166.
- c. at Jameston.
- d. at Trewern, east of Llandewi Velfrey at OS ref. SN171177. (nothing visible on Google Earth)

By 1777 all the associated meetings (with the exception of Haverfordwest) at Puncteston, Newport, St Davids, Redstone (north of Narberth) and Jameston (near Manorbier) had been discontinued, largely as a result of extreme persecution and consequent emigration of Quakers to North America. In 1821 the last meeting ceased at Haverfordwest, In the 1790s American Quakers migrated to Milford Haven from Nova Scotia where life was intolerable under the Puritan authorities, and founded a meeting in the town, building a meeting house and graveyard by 1811. Following a long period of decline in the 19th century, this meeting is now thriving and new meetings have started in Haverfordwest and Aberporth in Ceredigion.

Section 13: AN APPARENT ABSENCE OF “GEORGES”

No evidence of “George” burials was found for the following 69 burial grounds:

It is likely that “Georges” were interred in several of the above chapels and cemeteries, but proof of this depends on more registers becoming available for study.

Section 14: EARLIEST SETTLEMENTS

By the early 16th century Pembrokeshire was divided into seven regions called Hundreds. These were loosely aligned on the five ancient Welsh cantrefi, which were each divided into two or three Cymydau or Commotes. Each Hundred supposedly contained a hundred homesteads and a law court.

The following Table 2 lists 32 Pembrokeshire parish churchyards where more than one George interment was made between 1651 and 1800 (about six generations). These figures suggest that George families were initially settled mainly in the Hundred of Cemais, and then spread into the neighbouring Cilgerran, Dewisland and Dungleddy Hundreds. The concentration of George families in urban Prendergast and St Mary’s, adjacent in Haverfordwest, may indicate a separate set of George families, a result of patronymic practice. Nevern Parish seems to have held the seminal population in North Pembrokeshire.

The figures in parentheses (from FP) show baptisms for the same period. Again, Cemais and Cilgerran appear to have the earlier and larger populations. The concentration in Rudbaxton may be associated with "Georges" in neighbouring Prendergast and St Mary's parishes. Note the apparent rapid increase in population though the 150 year period.

*See Section 12.23.

The early concentration of Georges in Nevern is also reflected in the Hearth Tax assessments for 1670. This reveals that for Cemais, George families lived in the eleven parishes listed in table 3 below, and that five were located in Nevern parish.

Section 15: FEMALE AND MALE MORTALITY

Item 12 in the Bibliography provides a detailed account of the social structure and living conditions in Pembrokeshire from 1536 onwards, and reveals how the leading landowners exercised control over most aspects of local life, largely to their own advantage in the early period. Up to the late-nineteenth century the lives of the “lower orders” of the population were characterised by poor nutrition, insanitary and overcrowded housing, long hours of hard agricultural labour, low wages and scant education and health-care. In 1912 the Annual Report of the County Medical Officer of Health presented a highly critical account of the housing conditions of the poor. These conditions inevitably led to increased disease and shortened life expectancy. Contaminated water supplies posed an additional threat to town-dwellers.

Following the Great War, farm workers began joining trade unions and gained more influence in achieving better wages and working conditions, to the benefit of their families’ health and longevity.

The following Table 4, based on the burial directory, illustrates how the death rate for younger women and infant girls declined from the Victorian era to the present day; this was largely due to safer childbirth. Records lacking age or date information have been excluded from this table, but infants are included: unfortunately since age was not mentioned in the earliest burial records, the first two rows are virtually blank. Also, in the first half of the period 1751-1850 there were many records which omitted the age of the deceased.

(The only record here of a woman reaching a hundred years of age is for Margaret George, a member of the Cilgerran gentry, who died in 1862. Her gravestone is in Bridell Churchyard, directory para 66.13)

Table 4: Variation of Deceased’s Age with Time (Females)

Period	Age 0-6 yrs	7-30	31-65	66-100	Totals
1551-1650 no age records	0	0	0	0	0
1651-1750 almost no age records	2	1	1	2	6
1751-1850 few age records before 1812	31	26	37	57	151
1851-1950	45	64	109	164	382
1951-2012 (61 yrs)	2	1	17	109	129
Totals	80	92	164	332	668

The following Table 5 presents the same analysis for males. Again there is the prominent decline in child mortality in modern times, and again, the lack of age data for the early period masks the short life-expectancy. Some deaths in the 7-65 age group, between 1651 and 1950, might be attributed to the dangerous life of mariners (especially in wooden sailing ships) and to injuries from the many wars of the period. The greatest age recorded here is for James George who died in 1860 aged 98. His unmarked grave is in Nolton Churchyard, directory para 100.2. (A William Jenkins of Pentre Ifan, Nevern lived to a hundred and died in 1843)

Table 5: Variation of Deceased's Age with Time (Males)

Period	Age				Totals

The cause of death is rarely mentioned in parish and chapel records, but the afflictions causing death in the county included tuberculosis (also known as consumption, phthisis and scrofula), smallpox, cholera, poliomyelitis, influenza, asthma, pleurisy, dysentery, typhoid fever, typhus, venereal diseases, pneumonia, diphtheria (also known as croup), and scarlet fever which mainly affected children. All of these have been largely eradicated.

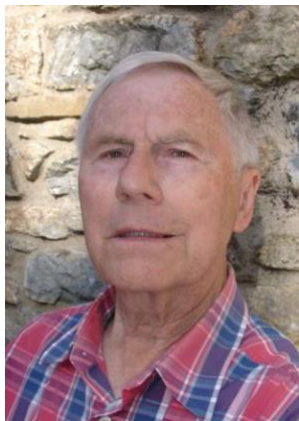

E T Lewis lists fifty-six people, of various surnames (including four Georges) who, between 1785 and 1963, attained ages between 90 and 102. These individuals, 32 men and 24 women, lived in the North Pembrokeshire parishes of Meline, Nevern, Eglwyswrw, Eglwyswen and Llanfair Nant Gwyn. However, no personal details are offered to help explain these long lives.

Section 16: ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

1. The Ordnance Survey, for their superb 25,000 scale maps, which clearly mark every church, chapel and cemetery. Three maps were required for this project; sheets OL35, OL36 and EXPLORER 185.
2. The staff at Pembrokeshire Archives, Prendergast, Haverfordwest, for providing and deciphering parish and chapel burial records.
3. The staff at the National Library of Wales, Aberystwyth, for providing burial records.
4. Pembrokeshire County Council, for supplying cemetery and crematorium records.
5. Dyfed Family History Society, for providing sources of burial records, OS map references and chapel founding dates.
6. Delyth Jones of Dinas, for the most difficult translations of Welsh inscriptions, and for explaining some chapel names.
7. Morys Rhys of Dinas, for checking an early draft and providing encouragement.
8. Imogen Evans of Dinas, who read through the final typescript with characteristic penetration, eliminating errors and correcting the prose.
9. Claire Urwin for her understanding and forbearance as her husband traipsed around the county for nearly two years, garnering gravestone inscriptions.

Section 17: THE AUTHOR

Len Urwin and his wife Claire have lived on a smallholding in Dinas near Fishguard, since their move from Hertfordshire in June 1988. He was a founder-member of the Dinas Historical Society in March 2001. Len is not related to any George family, but has researched the George families of Penwennol and Maesteg in Dinas, who are descended from William and Mary George of Tresinwen, and has included comments on them in this document.

Whilst researching David Lloyd George's contacts with west Wales, by sheer luck he discovered a "lost" letter written by the statesman in 1913 when he was Chancellor of the Exchequer. This is now in the NLW. Len is currently interested in discovering the parents and siblings of brothers William George (1747-1839) of Tresinwen, Llanwnda, and John George (1750-1833) of Fagwrfran West, Puncteston.

The author hopes that this survey will be of value to future generations of "Georges" and their relatives, and that perhaps someday, someone will extend the survey to include all of South Pembrokeshire. He also commends the format of this survey as a model for researchers of other surnames within the County. A slight regret is that the Welsh inscriptions were not highlighted in the directory, so as to indicate Welsh-speaking families.

The survey became an adventure for the author as churches and chapels, large and small, were discovered in their various settings within the tranquil and virtually unchanging countryside, each a silent witness to the generations of people who had lived and worshiped there.

Section 19: CHAPEL NAMES

Welsh non-conformists found inspiration in the Old and New Testaments when naming their chapels. Biblical references for chapels named in sections 13 and 20 of this survey are briefly explained in the following.

Antioch: a town in Pisidia, Asia Minor, visited by Paul on his first evangelistic journey.

Berachar: Beracah: the "Valley of Blessings" on the road from Hebron to Jerusalem, named after Jehoshaphat's victory over Moab and Ammon.

Berea: a small city in south-west Macedonia, where Paul the Apostle preached.

Bethabara: a place on the eastern bank of the Jordan River where John baptised.

Bethel: "House of God". A place north of Galilee where Jacob dreamed of the ladder between heaven and earth.

Bethesda: "House of Grace". A pool in Jerusalem where Jesus performed a healing miracle.

Bethlehem: "House of Bread" The ancestral home of David and the birthplace of Jesus.

Beulah: Isaiah's name for the Promised Land.

Caersalem: Caer (Welsh) for stronghold, plus Salem.

Calvaria: Welsh for Calvary which derives from the Latin word Calvaria, meaning "The Skull". The place of execution outside Jerusalem where Jesus was crucified.

Ebenezer: “Stone of Help”. The site where Israel was defeated by the Philistines and the Ark of the Covenant was captured. Some twenty years later the defeat was reversed and a stone named Ebenezer was placed on the site by Samuel to commemorate the victory.

Gedeon: (Gideon) the fifth and perhaps greatest recorded judge of Israel. He was the son of Joash of the tribe of Manassehs.

Gethsemane: a garden to the east of Jerusalem where Jesus was betrayed and arrested.

Goshen: a fertile area in the Egyptian delta where Jacob settled during the rule of Joseph.

Hepzibar: the wife of Hezekiah, 13th King of Judah, and mother of Manasseh.

Hermon: “sacred place”. A mountain east of the Jordan River, the probable site of the transfiguration of Jesus.

Horeb: “Mountain of God”. A mountain in Sinai where Moses heard God speaking through the burning bush, to make a covenant with Israel.

Jabes: (sorrow). A city where the Kenite scribes dwelt. Also an honourable descendant of Judah.

Lebanon: Mount Lebanon, rich in cedar wood which was used in the building of the temple in Jerusalem.

Machpelah: caves with tombs in the old city of Hebron, where it is believed that the Jewish patriarchs and matriarchs Abraham and Sarah, Isaac and Rebecca, and Jacob and Leah were interred.

Nebo: the mountain near Jericho from where Moses viewed the Promised Land.

Penuel: “Face of God”. The place where Jacob wrestled with an angel, from which he declared “I have seen God face to face”.

Pisgah: a mountain ridge associated with Nebo.

Ramah: “height”. A city of the tribe of Benjamin. The place where Jeremiah was held, amongst the Jewish captives of Nebucadnezzar.

Rehoboth: an Edomite city, possibly built by Nimrod, on the River Euphrates. Also a well, dug by Isaac, in Philistine territory, south of Beersheba.

Salem: “Peaceful”. A city identified with ancient Jerusalem, captured by David, to become the capital city of Judah.

Saron: an Israeli name meaning “his song”. Also a fertile plain near the Mediterranean, extending from Joppa to Mount Carmel in the north.

Siloam: a storage pool in ancient Jerusalem. Also a village on the eastern slope of the Kidron Valley, north-west of the Dead Sea.

Siloh: the main sanctuary of worship for the Israelites after their conquest of Canaan.

Smyrna: a city on the Aegean coast of Anatolia, where an early church was founded by Paul.

Soar: (Zoar) from the story of Lot; a town in Canaan, formerly called Bela, which survived the judgement of God.

Tabernacl: the tent which served as a place of worship by the Israelites.

Tabor: a mountain east of Nazareth where Samuel told Saul that he would find men bearing gifts.

Zion: the city of David and the city of God.
